

Nepali Maoist and Communism

By: Prakash Poudyal

Prachanda is not confident with the outcome of the upcoming election as he finally pulled out of the government defying the upcoming elections. It is clear that his intention is to start communism to dictate us. Communism itself is not so bad in a socially perfect world. However, the way communism is constructed lends itself to create dictators like Stalin. Such privilege usually ends up in a dictatorship, having a small elite class, living unfairly at the expense of 99 percent of all the other people. The party ruled by these dictators simply consumes the benefit instead of turning it into production; eventually, no one wants to be a producer, when producers are what the economy needs the most. If a doctor earns the same as a road-digger, you choose the easiest job.

Most of the modern people hate communism because they think the harder you work, the more you should make. China is in a different situation.

Communism there did not fail dramatically like the Soviet Union, because it is gradually adapting capitalist policies and allowing greater freedom. Approximately one-third of its economy is now private. This is a huge step forward for them, and has allowed millions to bring themselves up out of the poverty that years of communism had forced on them.

If Prachanda wants communism in Nepal, it does not work, and it never will. As long as humans are humans they always fight for freedom, as they did several times in Nepal's history. He should go for election to win people's heart if he can – and it is never too late.
